Excerpt: . . . the midst of the commotion, the defendant came into the yard and being enraged at the escape of the convicts, seized a clapboard and struck the plaintiff three or four times over the shoulders and back. This does not impress us as a proper case for the infliction of exemplary damages or smart money. An employer who, in a fit of passion, assaults his servant for a neglect of duty, thereby commits a breach of the peace and an actionable-wrong. But if, making due allowance for the infirmities of human temper, the defendant has a reasonable excuse, arising from the provocation or fault of the plaintiff, but not sufficient to justify entirely the act done, then damages-ought not to be assessed by way of punishment and the circumstances of mitigation should be considered. For the public offense, Massey swore out a warrant, upon which Ward was arrested, arraigned, pleaded guilty, was fined 10 and costs and paid the same. For the private injury this action is prosecuted. And the elements of damages are, the personal indignity involved in the assault, the plaintiff's bodily pain and suffering, loss of time and labor, and diminished capacity to work from the date of the assault to Massey's death, and the expenses of medical and surgical attendance during all injuries consequent upon the injuries received. Ushman v. Waddell, 1 Baldwin, 59, was an action by a schoolmaster against a parent for a severe beating. The plaintiff had punished one...
